

Abstract

Periorbital Anatomy and Its Clinical Relevance to Filler Injections

Filler injections to the cheek and periorbital region are one of the most commonly performed aesthetic procedures by plastic surgeons. However, this is an anatomically complex region and such procedures are associated with real risks. The presenter will share advanced anatomical knowledge of the relevant structures for the safe performance of filler injections and structural fat grafting.